SESSION-2021-22

Q.A:- Attempt a critical appreciation of Dawn at Puri.

Ans:- The poem is about the morning sights and sounds of Puri. As soon as it is dawn at Puri, endless noises of the crow can be heard. The cawing of the crow is a traditional symbol of daybreak. It is also nature's own early morning alarm. A human skull can also be seen on the holy sands of Puri. The reference here is to the long beach of Puri. This is the famous funeral site, which, for every believer, is the gateway to Heaven. The countrymen who are moving around are mostly hungry.

women who happen to have lost their lives are all clad in white. They have all passed the prime of their lives. wearing white, they lead a difficult and austere life. Now they are waiting to enter the Jagannath Temple.

The widows have austere eyes. Their life is so hard that their eyes have been robbed of any possible signs of life. Their eyes look as though caught in the fisherman's net the morning's environment of belief and prayer is spreading all around.

The faint morning light brings to sight reaps of broken, croded, worn-out sea shells left behind or washed on to the shore. These are the lepers of puri. Nobody knows their names.

And suddenly the smoky, reflection of the poet's dead mother burning on the pyre, falls on the poet's hide or skin. The pyre looks dull and sullen. It is the solitary pyre of the poet's aging mother.

It was the last wish of the poet's mother to be cremated on the holy sands of Puri. The mother had twisted under fainty into a certain place in heaven after death, just as the sunlight gets twisted on the can stonefly moving sands of Puri.
